Eight years ago, Carey Portell’s life shattered when a drunk driver collided head-on with her vehicle on Route 66, a few miles from her St. James, Missouri, home. It was two days after Christmas, and the 35-year-old was on her way to teach a Zumba class, with two of her daughters, Olivia, 12 and Mackenzie, 10, in the back seat of her Ford Taurus.

Carey suffered a fractured pelvis, crushed right ankle and dislocated left foot. After undergoing two surgeries, she remembers waking up to hear her eight-year-old son saying, “Thank you for staying alive, Mom.” She says, “When I looked down, my legs were in external fixators. I knew it was bad, but I had no clue how long or how hard my recovery would be.”

Climbing out of the depths
Confined to a wheelchair for almost two years, it was four years before Carey walked again without support. She had no feeling in her left foot during the first year. By the second year, shooting pains signaled the re-growth of nerves. Carey had 10 subsequent operations, fusing the joints in her ankles and bones in her pelvis.

The family received tremendous community support during Carey’s recovery. “At times I had no idea what our children were going through,” she says. “I’ll never get that time back.” Today the Portell children are ages 21, 19, 18 and 16.

Carey pushed herself to learn to walk with walking casts. Next, she focused on walking without support. “After four years, I felt like I had climbed an enormous mountain, and then I plateaued. I still had severe, permanent lower body injuries, poor balance, and delicate lower legs. I could only take about 3,000 steps a day.”

Carey wore leg braces and lace-up boots 95% of the time, and she was unable to resume her former job. Yet she needed to remain productive. Before the accident, she had raised Corriente cattle, a roping breed. “We sold them as soon as I got out of the hospital,” she says. “I didn’t want to re-injure myself, but I loved working on the farm.” The Portells purchased 40 head of Angus. Greg continued to work fulltime off-farm, and do evening chores. But getting in and out of the truck multiple times daily was painful, and took a toll on Carey’s energy. “I had the mindset that I’d do the work the way I’d always done it,” she says.

AgrAbility Opens a Door

Then, in 2014 Carey attended a University of Missouri conference for ag women, where she met Karen Funkenbusch, Missouri AgrAbility director. Funkenbusch contacted the state Dept. of Vocational Rehabilitation, and encouraged Carey to apply to become a client. “We taught her how to avoid falls, protect herself if she fell, and how to work safer and smarter,” Funkenbusch says. “We showed her how to make simple modifications, and use proper body mechanics and ergonomics.”

Funkenbusch saw that Carey was determined to succeed. With help from Missouri AgrAbility and the Dept. of Vocational Rehabilitation, Carey received funding to buy a Polaris Ranger UTV. “There’s a cube feeder on the back of the bed, making feeding much easier,” Carey says. “We installed a switch inside the cab to open the feeder door, so I just pull up beside the bunks and let ‘er rip.”

During calving season, she releases the lid of the feed bin on the UTV, and the cows gather to feed, allowing her to drive around them, and count cows and calves.

“The UTV keeps me from being bumped over by cows, and from flying calf hooves,” she says. “I don’t have to walk on ground with frozen hoof prints. It’s the most essential piece of equipment I’ve received.”

Today the Portells have 120 head of Angus on their 1,000 acres. “The cows give me a purpose,” she says.

Sharing Her Story

Despite her shyness, Carey gradually began to share her experience, and today she’s a motivational speaker who addresses the repercussions of drunk driving, and what it’s like to get back to agriculture after a serious injury.

“In the spring and fall, I speak at a lot of schools,” she says. From January to April, she talks with farm groups. “Farmers have a lot of pride, and often feel they’ll lose their independence if they use assistive technology,” she says. “Adaptations help keep farmers farming—they’ll just do the work differently.”

Although Carey has gained strength and mobility, she has end-stage traumatic arthritis. “I have moments when I feel 80 years old, but then I have the best days ever, and I stop and soak it all in,” she says. “I have to avoid doing so much that I hurt myself, but enough to keep my joints loose. It requires patience.”

She offers these words of advice to others:

1. Acceptance. “Accept where you’re at now, and what’s possible in the future,” she says. Acceptance is the key to my happiness.”

2. Forgiveness. “You must choose to forgive,” she says. “I do not excuse the drunk driver. I have to forgive him for my own sake. There’s no other way to heal.”

Carey says that this life-changing event brought her closer to God. “Nothing, absolutely nothing, happens in this world by mistake,” she says. “I don’t focus on what needs to be changed in the world as much as what needs to be changed in me. I think of all the lessons I’ve learned and the challenges I’ve gone through. It forced me to grow into the person I am today.”
